PREFACE.

This chronology of historical events, originally compiled by the late George P. Putnam and forming a part of his comprehensive cyclopedia on "The World's Progress," has been carefully revised and brought down to the present time, and it is now issued in a separate form in the trust that every one who needs at his elbow a convenient manual of dates may find his requirements satisfied in this volume. To teachers especially it is hoped that it may prove an important aid in imparting instruction. They more than all others appreciate the difficulty of permanently fixing in the mind the exact time of great occurrences, and they should accordingly value any means of lessening that difficulty. Such a means, it is thought, is found in the arrangement here adopted of placing in parallel columns on facing pages the events occurring throughout the world at about the same period of time. This calls in the powerful assistance of association in enabling the memory to grasp and retain a hold of important dates by showing at a glance simultaneous occurrences in other countries. It also helps in teaching the lesson that the history of any one nation is only a part of the history of the world; and that the proper way to study true history is to follow the progress of the people scattered over the face of the globe, and not of a fragmentary few gathered into one corner of it.

The most distant events are naturally the ones it is the most difficult to place with positive certainty. Egyptian history goes the furthest back of any known to us, and more light has been thrown upon its early days by recent research than upon that of any other country. Yet to-day authorities still differ as to the time of the foundation of its first dynasty by as wide a margin as 1,500 years (Bunsen, 3,600 B.C.; Mariette, 5,000 B.C.). In this condition of doubt it has been deemed wise to take a conservative estimate and the chronology of Brugsch and Duncker has therefore been followed. The chronology of Bishop Usher is now so universally discredited by Biblical scholars as well as by other students that it has been entirely discarded, and Hebraic history has been begun with the introduction of monarchy among the Jews, the earliest event in their career that can be fixed with any approximate degree of accuracy. Other occurrences in the twilight period of history, to which custom has assigned arbitrary dates, have been omitted as of too mythical a character and of too uncertain a time to be recorded in a sober book of facts. Perhaps future investigation and new sources of information may some day clear away the clouds and let us see which are facts and which are fables, and the former will then find their place in chronologies; but for the present, at least, chronologies are the one place they should not appear in.
